Subject: Microsoft Settlement

Microsoft again demonstrates utter disrespect and mockery for the judicial process by proposing a settlement which not only minimizes their punishment but also extends their monopoly power and hurts the very companies they have exercised this power against for so many years.

Microsoft should pay damages to Netscape, Sun, and Apple. They should also pay several billion dollars to schools with which the schools would have to purchase Apple computers. Finally, Microsoft should be broken into a "Windows" division and a "Applications" division. They should be made an example of.
